A Juvenille Gentus. Helman became a pupil in the Wells Grammar school of Poston last autumn. She did not know a word of English but she could speak a little French and fluently. She was placed in the lowest grade in the school, but in a few weeks her teacher thought that she would probably gain more in the next higher grade. This was repeated until the principal advanced her to the highest class in the school. When it came time for the last examination and the diploma list was made out, the name of this little girl, who entered the Wells school in the fall in the lowest grade, was among the list of graduates, and with honors too. Thus she made the four years' course in one.

A GLORIOUS NIGHT SCENE. The Electrical Illumination at the

They have staged electricity at Buffalo this summer, and they call it the Pan-American exposition, says Eugene R. White in The Atlantic. It took a rectangle of 250 acres for the stage and over $10,000,000 for the settings. The result, baldly stated, is the most glorious night seene the world has ever had the fortune to witness. This staging of Niagara is the one unforgettable thing about the affair. * * * Somewhere over in Canada has sunk the red ball of finial. Standing between the pylons, one sees the slow dusk conquer the massed color, the insistent hues. The buildings huddle mysteriously together about the gray tower, and here and there a band strikes up. Dim like an exhalation is the picture now, and a pervasive hush is over the scene. The splash of the fountains is of a sudden loud. The statues whisper together.

There glows, before one knows it, a premonitory redness along up through the lines of pillars which range themselves in solemn file in the great court. Each pillar is surmounted with a close cluster of lights. And look! The great lower itself is blushing a low red. The red is angry now, sharper, and theredaylight is almost here again. Each building has glimmered into light. Electricity has mounted her splendent

But it is not daylight; it is something almost better-refined daylight. Less frank, less brutal, less modern. Suddenly from everywhere there has come a light which is more than a glow, but less than a glare. The exposition in a second or so has grown from a city of shadows to a vision of light. And such a vision and such a light!

Expositions, like men, thought the managers, should hitch their wagons to a star. The Pan-American has hitched its glorious wain to the Pleiades. It has harnessed itself to no less than 250,000 of those "domesticated, biddable stars" called incandescent lights. It is no mere picking out the outline of a building in a row of lights. It is recreating the architecture in a softer beauty, which, standing against the blue velvet of the sky, gives us a picture bitherto not possible even in dreamland. Areades, cornices, moldings, domes, wall spaces, all have burst into light. Metaphor has spent itself and become outworn upon previous efforts which were not a fraction of what is here achieved.

Ills Guess. A young man and a young woman who were visiting a town in Michigan passed an engine house which had a after reading the sign, "Deluge No. 3,"
